WELCOME

Welcome to the XVII International Congress of Christian Archaeology in the Netherlands! Five years after the last congress, held at what once was the very centre of the ancient world, this edition of the CIAC takes place at the northern border of the Roman Empire. The ancient Roman army camps of Utrecht and Nijmegen provide the setting for scholars to reflect on the significance and impact of frontiers during the process of political, social-economic, and religious transformation that characterizes the world of Late Antiquity.

During the preparations for this conference, many proposals for papers and posters reached us—much more than we could accommodate. By making the selection that you have before you we hope to have put together an attractive programme that covers the various types of research interests characteristic of current research in the field of Christian archaeology. By subdividing the program into different geographical areas, we have aimed to cover the enormous territorial expanse of the later Roman Empire as best we could. At the same time, we have also included a series of thematic sessions that focus on the peripheral zones and borderlands of the Roman empire from a more conceptual perspective. Through keynote lectures, papers, posters, and tours, we hope to stimulate reflection and debate on common and less common topics, and thus to intensify scholarly discussions concerning a period during which Christianity expanded all over and even beyond the reaches of a disintegrating Roman commonwealth.

While the emphasis of our program is on an alteration of geographical and thematic sessions we have also reserved considerable space for presentation of novitates. Furthermore, there is a special session dedicated to the fate of Christian heritage in regions currently afflicted by violent conflicts. In a time where the issue of frontiers, migration, religious matters, and cross-cultural exchange, or the absence thereof, are at the very core of our daily news, we believe that the historical and archaeological study of these topics in the way we propose here can be of great use and value, not just to us but to society at large.

An illustration from the Carolingian psalter preserved in the University Library of Utrecht serves as an emblem of this conference. The so-called Utrecht Psalter documents how ninth-century Frankish monks drew upon an artistic vocabulary they derived directly from the Roman past: as they tried to give visual expression to Christian ideas, they used classical temples and domed tempiettos, as well as representations derived from early Christian art. In addition, they wrote in rustic capitals that were also inspired by the classical past. Thus this famous manuscript from Northern France encapsulates the transfer of the ancient and early Christian ideas and traditions across the borders of place and time in a way that that makes this psalter a perfect illustration of the topic of our conference.

Let us conclude this brief introduction by expressing the hope that the XVII International Congress of Christian Archaeology will contribute to the crossing of borders in both a scholarly and in a human sense.
